Subject: Keep Oregon's Wolves Protected

Dear Commissioners,

I am writing in support of maintaining protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act. Delisting wolves in Oregon is extremely premature, and I urge the commission to reject any such recommendation for the following reasons:

-- Oregon's wolves are nowhere near recovered. Scientists indicate Oregon could support up to 1,450 wolves, and yet there are only an estimated 83 wolves in the state today.

-- Most published studies on species viability indicate there needs to be a population in the range of several thousand animals -- not a mere 83 -- to be able to withstand catastrophic events like disease outbreaks.

-- The state wildlife agency's report notes that if the number of wolves killed each year increases from 7 or 8 wolves up to 11 or 12 wolves, the chance of Oregon's wolf population failing increases to a staggering 50 percent probability. That's a huge increase in risk to Oregon's wolves -- we must apply the precautionary principle of science and wait until the state's wolf population is larger before wolves are delisted.

-- The Oregon ESA requires that delisting decisions be based on science which has been peer-reviewed by an outside panel of expert scientists who have no bias in the issue. If the commission will be basing its delisting decision on the state wildlife agency's gray wolf status review and population-viability analysis, the commission must first get these reports peer-reviewed by independent, outside scientists.

-- Most of Oregon's wolves live in the northeastern part of the state and already are less protected than they used to be due to some provisions in the state wolf plan that recently went into effect. Those wolves are the source population for the rest of the state, so we should wait to see how those wolves fare under less protective management before we consider removing safeguards entirely.

-- Oregon's small wolf population exists only because of state protections and model rules for coexisting with wolves to reduce unnecessary conflict. Delisting would result in a big step backwards.

-- Oregon's natural heritage includes our magnificent wildlife and wolves are a part of that heritage; they deserve continued protections and a real shot at recovery to ensure this natural heritage will exist for future generations.

In sum, I urge you to follow the law, science and strong conservation-minded values of our state to preserve our natural heritage and keep wolves protected at this time.

Sincerely,

Linda Waine

Subject: Keep Oregon's Wolves Protected

Dear Commissioners,

What's the matter with you people? Wolves clearly are not recovered in your state or ANY other state in the US. Who's pressuring you to remove wolves from Endangered Species protection? Are they promising money flowing into your state from hunting revenue? Are they whining to you about how those horrible wolves are ruining their livelihoods? The only one ruining lives will be your commission if you chose to remove wolves from endangered species protection. The only ones destroying families will be you. Leave the wolves alone!

I am writing in support of maintaining protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act. Delisting wolves in Oregon is extremely premature, and I urge the commission to reject any such recommendation for the following reasons:

-- Oregon's wolves are nowhere near recovered. Scientists indicate Oregon could support up to 1,450 wolves, and yet there are only an estimated 83 wolves in the state today.

-- Most published studies on species viability indicate there needs to be a population in the range of several thousand animals -- not a mere 83 -- to be able to withstand catastrophic events like disease outbreaks.

-- The state wildlife agency's report notes that if the number of wolves killed each year increases from 7 or 8 wolves up to 11 or 12 wolves, the chance of Oregon's wolf population failing increases to a staggering 50 percent probability. That's a huge increase in risk to Oregon's wolves -- we must apply the precautionary principle of science and wait until the state's wolf population is larger before wolves are delisted.

-- The Oregon ESA requires that delisting decisions be based on science which has been peer-reviewed by an outside panel of expert scientists who have no bias in the issue. If the commission will be basing its delisting decision on the state wildlife agency's gray wolf status review and population-viability analysis, the commission must first get these reports peer-reviewed by independent, outside scientists.

-- Most of Oregon's wolves live in the northeastern part of the state and already are less protected than they used to be due to some provisions in the state wolf plan that recently went into effect. Those wolves are the source population for the rest of the state, so we should wait to see how those wolves fare under less protective management before we consider removing safeguards entirely.

-- Oregon's small wolf population exists only because of state protections and model rules for coexisting with wolves to reduce unnecessary conflict. Delisting would result in a big step backwards.

-- Oregon's natural heritage includes our magnificent wildlife and wolves are a part of that heritage; they deserve continued protections and a real shot at recovery to ensure this natural heritage will exist for future generations.

In sum, I urge you to follow the law, science and strong conservation-minded values of our state to preserve our natural heritage and keep wolves protected at this time.

Sincerely,

Dear Commissioners,

I urge you to keep protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act for the present.

-- 83 wolves does not seem like enough to ensure survival of the species - more of a cushion is needed because impacts of hunting and trapping are always a little difficult to predict.

-- disease outbreaks have occurred in wolves - an outbreak in Yellowstone of something Parvo?? really reduced their wolf population. This also argues for a larger population prior to delisting.

-- The state wildlife agency's report states that if the number of wolves killed each year increases from 7 or 8 wolves up to 11 or 12 wolves, the chance of Oregon's wolf population failing increases to 50 percent probability. that indicates that more wolves must be present to ensure a reasonable expectation of viability.

-- The Oregon ESA requires that delisting decisions be based on science which has been peer-reviewed by an outside panel of expert scientists who have no bias in the issue. If the commission will be basing its delisting decision on the state wildlife agency's gray wolf status review and population-viability analysis, the commission must first get these reports peer-reviewed by independent, outside scientists.

Subject: Keep Oregon's Wolves Protected Because Scientists Slam Plan to Strip Oregon Wolf Protections

Dear Commissioners,

A group of top independent biologists has rebuked Oregon's plan to remove state Endangered Species Act protections from its wolves, counted at only 83 individuals and missing from nearly 90 percent of suitable habitat in the state. Contrary to a "fundamentally flawed" Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife study, these scientists say, the wolves are far from recovered. Pulling protections now would show that politics -- not science -- guide Oregon wildlife management.

The scientists' critical analyses of the state study joined more than 22,000 comments submitted to the Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission, which will vote Nov. 9 on whether to remove or keep safeguards, depending on the Commission's desire to be seen as credible in the eyes of the public.

According to some of the world's foremost experts in wolf and population biology, Oregon's move to strip gray wolves of protection simply doesn't reflect reality.

Dear Commissioners,

As a biologist and retired park ranger I would request that you maintain the protection for wolves in your state. Top predators deserve a right to exist at least in small populations. Oregon, unlike Wyoming, Idaho and Montana has a broader population of people with more diverse views on wolves so please listen to your people more carefully and give these animals a chance. Trophy hunters and ranchers are a small percentage of your total population.

Those wolves are the source population for the rest of the state, so we should wait to see how those wolves fare under less protective management before we consider removing safeguards entirely.

-- Oregon's small wolf population exists only because of state protections and model rules for coexisting with wolves to reduce unnecessary conflict. Delisting would result in a big step backwards.

-- Oregon's natural heritage includes our magnificent wildlife and wolves are a part of that heritage; they deserve continued protections and a real shot at recovery to ensure this natural heritage will exist for future generations.

Dear Commissioners,

I am writing in support of maintaining protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act. Delisting wolves in Oregon is extremely premature, and I urge the commission to reject any such recommendation for the following reasons:

- Oregon's wolves are nowhere near recovered. Scientists indicate Oregon could support up to 1,450 wolves, and yet there are only an estimated 83 wolves in the state today.
- Most published studies on species viability indicate there needs to be a population in the range of several thousand animals -- not a mere 83 -- to be able to withstand catastrophic events like disease outbreaks.
- The state wildlife agency's report notes that if the number of wolves killed each year increases from 7 or 8 wolves up to 11 or 12 wolves, the chance of Oregon's wolf population failing increases to a staggering 50 percent probability. That's a huge increase in risk to Oregon's wolves -- we must apply the precautionary principle of science and wait until the state's wolf population is larger before wolves are delisted.
- The Oregon ESA requires that delisting decisions be based on science which has been peer-reviewed by an outside panel of expert scientists who have no bias in the issue. If the commission will be basing its delisting decision on the state wildlife agency's gray wolf status review and population-viability analysis, the commission must first get these reports peer-reviewed by independent, outside scientists.

Dear Commissioners,

After 60 years without its historic top predator, Oregon's first known wolf wandered in from Idaho in 1999, and in 2008 a breeding pair was confirmed in the state. It's only been seven years since then -- yet the state is already considering removing wolf protections.

Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission, it is readily apparent to anyone willing to be objective, that wolf recovery is nowhere near complete.

Oregon wolves occupy just 12 percent of the habitat deemed suitable by the state, and most of those wolves live in the northeast region, where wolves are already less protected due to certain provisions in the state wolf plan. Those wolves are the source population for wolves to spread to the rest of Oregon. So if they lose protections now, recovery across the state is doomed.

A group of top independent biologists has rebuked Oregon's plan to remove state Endangered Species Act protections from its wolves, counted at only 83 individuals and missing from nearly 90 percent of suitable habitat in the state. Contrary to a "fundamentally flawed" Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife study, these scientists say, the wolves are far from recovered. Pulling protections now would show that politics -- not science -- guide Oregon wildlife management.

The scientists' critical analyses of the state study joined more than 22,000 comments submitted to the Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission, which will vote Nov. 9 on whether to remove or keep safeguards, depending on the Commission's desire to be seen as credible in the eyes of the public.

According to some of the world's foremost experts in wolf and population biology, Oregon's move to strip gray wolves of protection simply doesn't reflect reality.

I am writing in support of maintaining protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act. Delisting wolves in Oregon is extremely premature, and I urge the commission to reject any such recommendation for the following reasons:

Subject: Keep Oregon's Wolves Protected

Dear Commissioners,

Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission

Protect wolves with maximum Endangered Species Status.
See the REAL and INDISPUTABLE FACTS about WHY PREDATOR species (like wolves) are essential for healthy ecosystems.

Here are the FACTS!

Natural Predators KEEP ECOSYSTEMS HEALTHY, and natural predators ALSO KEEP wildlife populations (including PREY SPECIES) in a state of health, high numbers, and allow growth of a wide variety of species.

Where are these facts?

IT'S so SIMPLE that you will NOT have to bother DRAGGING through another EIR report ever again.

It's called HISTORY!

Historical accounts of North America from natives and early European explorers and early settlers show that NUMEROUS species of WOLVES lived in nearly ALL parts of the continent, and they lived in large numbers too.

And that was a GOOD THING!

There were also NUMEROUS species and subspecies of predator CATS of various sizes, many species of BEAR (also a predator), and a wide variety of other CANINE PREDATOR species and subspecies (fox, coyote, etc), and other PREDATOR species (wolverine, badger, etc. etc). AND even hundreds of species of AIR PREDATORS (Hawks, Eagle, Falcon, OWLS), and GUESS WHAT!

With ALL these predators, all over the continent, there were also MILLIONS UPON MILLIONS of PREY SPECIES that thrived in myriad diversity of species and in large numbers too.

AND YET, historical accounts show that with ALL THESE PREDATORS and ALL THESE PREY SPECIES thriving in HUGE NUMBERS... the land and waters and ecosystems were PRISTINE! Europeans marveled at how abundant wildlife was...and then they proceeded to shoot them all, plow under the lands, pave over and pollute land and waters, and destroy North America's great wild lands, ecosystems, and species...and then those same Old World settlers and their decendents had (and still have) the ignorant balls to blame the predators! (Despite the facts of their own historical accounts)

What remains of wildlife is a fraction of what once existed. Wildlife species of all types, are far fewer in number than used to be, most are at 10% or LESS of their historic numbers, some are at 1%, others are extinct. The few wild species that are abundant (like deer, mice, rats, rabbits) are not really over-populated; they are just congested into the few wild areas that remain, and they are over-eating the resources. They NEED predators, such as wolves, to come back into balance with the ecosystem.

WHENEVER and WHERE EVER natural WILD PREDATORS have been RE-introduced and increased in number, ALL other wildlife has IMPROVED, both in diversity and in numbers, but, more importantly, all the species come into balance with all other species, and the carrying capacity of the entire ecosystem increases for ALL the species. Yellowstone is a prime example where re-introduced wolves drastically improved the entire ecosystems for plants and animals.

So, please use your brains and your common sense...we ALL KNOW what North America used to have and that we have lost most of it due to a mindset of Europeans and other Old World immigrants who brought their destructive attitudes to the new World. Greed, willful ignorance, short-sighted profit over long-term sustainability, an "I don't give a damned attitude about future generations", and corruption at all levels has crippled natural ecosystems, but those ecosystems can still be saved and brought back to health. By doing so, humans will actually profit because healthy resources will provide nature's own food supplies for humans too. And Wolves and Predators are an essential part of restoring healthy ecosystems.

Please DO YOUR JOBS for the benefit of WILD ECOSYSTEMS and ALL WILD SPECIES?...(which is the VERY PURPOSE of your agency!) and protect and restore wolf populations to healthy numbers in Oregon.

You MUST maintain protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act. for the following reasons:

- Oregon's wolves are nowhere near recovered. Scientists indicate Oregon could support up to 1,450 wolves, and yet there are only an estimated 83 wolves in the state today.
- Most published studies on species viability indicate there needs to be a population in the range of several thousand animals -- not a mere 83 -- to be able to withstand catastrophic events like disease outbreaks.

Dear Commissioners,

My name is jan nelson. I am a farmer and forestland owner in lane county. I have a small flock of sheep and goats who serve as groundskeepers in our orchard and provide manure for the garden. We all know a few ranchers and hunters are pressing you to delist wolves; stripping them from protection. As a child living in a cabin in the north woods of Minnesota, I grew up eating venison and duck, that my father shot; and mutton from my aunt and uncle's farm. Many nights the wolves lulled me to sleep. Back then nobody considered killing wolves to keep them from preying on deer.

Our property is in the coast range foothills. We've seen cougars, coyotes, and bears here. I am the primary guard animal for my sheep and goats aided by a donkey. I consider those few farmers and ranchers who want predators eliminated, lazy; especially if you are using public lands. You're lazy and big crybabies. As for ODFW, we know you keep your jobs by making money selling hunting tags. Are you serious in maintaining that more than 83 wolves will impact anyone who is a real hunter.

Oregon should expand wolf populations. I would love to hear them again. I want to hear them on and around our property in the coast range.

I am writing in support of maintaining protections for gray wolves under Oregon's Endangered Species Act. Delisting wolves in Oregon is extremely premature, and I urge the commission to reject any such recommendation for the following reasons:
